Post-Cancellation Updates

NYRR would like to thank all of the 2012 marathon entrants for patience as we continue to work through issues related to the cancellation of the 2012 ING New York City Marathon. As the New York area continues to deal with the devastating impact of Superstorm Sandy, all of us at New York Road Runners wish to express our deep appreciation to our members, runners, partners, and the many others who have shown great patience as we sort through the consequences of the cancellation of the 2012 ING New York City Marathon. As soon as the race was cancelled, we began working hard to find solutions and answers to your questions about this unprecedented situation.

We have been listening carefully to everyone with an interest in the Marathon—runners from New York City, across the nation, and abroad; charities; sponsors; broadcast partners; our international travel partners; and many others who we're proud to collaborate with for the event that means so much to all of us and to the City of New York. We are carefully considering everyone's views and preferences, which are varied and extensive, and are working diligently with our insurers in the hope that we can provide the best response possible in as timely a manner as possible. Unfortunately, dealing with insurers takes time. We wish that this weren't the case, and we've been pressing our insurers to act quickly and responsibly. Rest assured that our focus, as always, is to serve our runners and community and to protect and enhance the positive impact and all the benefits of our great Marathon. We are working as fast as we can to reach solutions that will be best for our runners and partners, and we pledge to share those solutions with you as soon as possible.

For us, every day that goes by without a clear resolution for you is a day too long. Please know that we continue to appreciate your patience and understanding through this unprecedented situation, and that we will reach solutions that offer the most we can to runners. We are grateful for your continued support and will be in touch as soon as we have more information to share.
